

Q: Explain the genesis for the title “The End: A Love Story to the Universe.”

A: It started as just “The End,” but as with any true “soul story,” the end is never really the end. The title changed as the story evolved from a human relationship to a romance between humanity and the spirit world.

Q: Your story “The End” is written from the unique perspective of what you call a team “Upstairs’ as they try to unite a couple thousands of miles apart. Where did you come up with that original idea for a story?

A: The story wrote itself, in the most profound way. As Brownell started to put the story in writing, thinking it was pure fiction, the story unfolded as if she was guided by a team “Upstairs.” And, in fact, she was! As she wrote, the characters took over, excited to tell her the story from their perspective. The more she wrote, the more the team took over, not only with the story but also in her life!

Q: How much of Nelle and Robert’s story is real?

A: More than Brownell wants to admit! However, the names have been changed to protect the innocent (and the guilty).

Q: This story touches on the question of fate vs. free will and the role of the Upstairs, which begs the question: How might relationships be different if a couple knew they were being brought together for a reason, with support from the Other Side?

A: We’ll leave that up to the reader to decide for themselves. To us, the revelation was life changing.

Q: It’s been said that this story – “The End” – could be a college course, even though it’s only 9000 words. Why do you think they say that?

A: Probably because it packs a lot of philosophical questions and themes in a short, entertaining story.

Q: Will there be a sequel to “The End?” Or is the end the end?

A: The end is definitely not “the end.” Brownell is currently working on an intriguing sequel taking this story to the next level – and beyond. Stay tuned!

Readers can download and read the The End: A Love Story to the Universe FREE by clicking
HERE. <https://BookHip.com/QAQGPDW>

Brownell Landrum